If you're fortunate enough to be here with your dad, hug him, tell him you love him. If he's not here with you, after this call him, go to him, hug him and tell him you love him, good or bad he's the only one you got. If your father has passed as mine has today then feel every ounce of love i am about to speak and know as i do, that part of the most incredible man in the world is part of you, in your heart, in your soul, and in who you are.

I loved my dad, and he knew it but I don't think he knew how much he and our relationship meant to me. Let me just say, it meant the world to me and I am so glad the economy tanked and I had to move back home, it truly gave me the opportunity to know my dad as more than just my dad but as a person, as a friend, as someone I could talk to about anything and most importantly for my dad to know me. With out a doubt, my dad was taken too soon. It devastated & shocked us all. But we can, we are and we will take comfort in the love that we share for each other as a family and that my dad died with no regrets, a very loved man.

I admired my dad on so many levels. As a father he guided me down a righteous path, not only showing me the way but living it as well. If i needed to learn kindness I just needed to watch my dad. If i needed to learn patience i just needed to watch my dad. If i needed to learn loving i just needed to watch my dad. If i wanted to know the right thing do, i only had to see my dad live his life. My dad taught me so many great qualities, he taught all of us, me, my mom, my sister, my nieces, my cousins. Pretty much anybody who encountered him could always see that there was still good left in this world.

I couldn't talk about my dad without talking about that which he lived for most, my mom. My mom and dad had the most amazing relationship, I know they did because I witnessed it with my own eyes, it lasted 46 years and without a doubt could have lasted another 46. I know I speak for me and my sister when I say I am proud and grateful to be a product of that relationship.

If my dad were here today, I'm not quite sure what he would say, it would probably be something profound and meaningful, he had a way of doing that at important times, but I know what he would want us do. He'd want us to be strong, do what makes us happy, to stick together and have each others back and he'd want us to go forward in life to achieve all the things we know we can and he would want us to treat people the way we want to be treated.

I make one last promise to my dad, before all of you, that I will never forget what he has taught me, I will never forget that which he would have done and I will be the son, the brother, the uncle, the cousin, hopefully someday husband, the friend & the man that he would have wanted me to be.

Love you dad! Thank you!

EULOGY: OH COMRADE, DEAR COMRADE, OUR BELOVED COMRADE!

The Marxist-Leninist Weekly, Organ of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Canada (Marxist-Leninist), September 14-20, 1997.

You who were the light of so many of our lives. Words cannot express the grief we feel at your untimely loss. None of us can believe that your person, your oh-so-human person, is no longer with us. You who have always been there for us workers, women and youth, artists, writers, journalists, actors, musicians, academics, scientists and researchers; those of us who are national minorities, Native peoples, differently abled, and from amongst the most vulnerable in society, and your many, many, many fellow travellers.

In this regard, Comrade, I would be remiss if I did not make special mention of your dear family members, of your beloved children, each and every one of whom made you so proud, your brothers and sisters, cousins, nephews and nieces for whom you were a guide and an inspiration.

I would also be remiss if I did not mention your many second families, literally spread throughout the world, on every continent, in oh-so-many countries. And the Party children, Comrade Bains. The children are so sad for they loved you so. As for the younger generation, Comrade Bains, it has spoken for itself, as you taught them to do. You are their pride; you are their joy. They will celebrate your life in their own deeds to change the world.

Comrade Bains, the twinkle in your eyes, your mischievous smile, your beautiful artistic hands, your fine mind, your tender love for all of us they all combined to work a magic. Who could resist your purity, your sincerity, your drive to bring out the best in everyone you met, in everyone you worked with, no matter what their age, what their standing in life, what their ideas or opinions? Meeting you was like falling in love at first sight, over and over and over again, just as you too fell in love with the best in everyone, bringing out whatever they had to offer to make this world, "where tears are hung on every tree", a better place, a place in which this great humanity can realise its potential, so tragically squandered by the old forces at this time.

He and my mom.... well, they've been through it all. High School sweethearts but not in a traditional way. My mom says that Dad was living in a car under the El when she met him. We joke that she must have thought... well, this looks like a good guy to marry and have 4 kids with. Haha!

Though he often had odd ways of showing it, he loved & admired her immensely. In her eulogy she called him her soul mate. She talked about how people would call her Saint Paulette (for putting up with Harry!) and that Harry was "her ticket to Heaven". They were opposites in nearly every sense of the word. They balanced each other and loved each other unconditionally. My Dad got to calling her "My Hero".

Though there is no good way to sum up my relationship with my dad, one memory I recall took place while planning Carl's & my wedding. I asked my dad what song he wanted to dance with me to. He replied, "I don't care. Just as long as it isn't any of the daddy's little girl shit. How about something by The Doors?".

Clearly, our relationship was not a sappy one, but it was strong & genuine. My dad was not just my Father. He was my friend. There wasn't anything that I couldn't talk to my dad about. I miss our daily conversations.

I particularly enjoyed spending my time with him firing pistols at the shooting range. He enjoyed teaching me and I loved learning. More than anything, I loved the individual time I got to spend with him.

Tribute from Husband to Wife

Example Eulogy

Susan was a remarkable woman who always held her head high and gave endlessly to those around her.

Born in Cowra NSW in 1949, Susan's father George was an army officer, and her mother Marie, a nurse.

Susan had an interesting upbringing - born into a family with a long history of military service. Much of her early childhood was spent moving around with her family from one posting to another, and she saw much of Australia as a young girl.

It was only by chance that first I met Susan a couple of weeks before they were due to be posted to Canberra. The moment I set eyes on her, I knew she was the one for me. She was the loveliest woman I had ever seen and reminded me of Greta Garbo from one of the old movies - her poise, her grace and her beauty.

Our courtship was difficult as we had to overcome distance, but I was determined to make her my wife. Susan and I came from different backgrounds: I was brought up in the city and had never ventured out into the country, while Susan had grown up with a military background, and had travelled to many places by the time she was 18. But that didn't worry us - we complimented each other perfectly and got on like a house of fire.

After getting permission from her father, I proposed, she said yes (eventually) - and I was the happiest man alive. I remember how

My relationship with Dad

As the youngest of my brothers and sisters, I had a unique opportunity to spend time alone with Dad. After my older siblings had left for college and began their careers, I lived alone with my parents during my last two years of high school, and the beginning of that time included a few months living alone with Dad when we first moved to Kentucky, while Mom sold our old house in Michigan.

In Kentucky, and during our many six-hour drives to Michigan, Dad and I talked about all manner of scientific things: astronomy, physics, history of science, or whatever books he was currently reading. He also introduced me to special relativity. I became more engaged in science, and thought of becoming a physicist. He taught me some concepts of calculus, and that it is more important to be able to derive a result than memorize it.

On the other hand, Dad and I had little idea how to live alone. We ate a lot of spaghetti then. We once put soda bottles in the freezer in order to quickly cool them, then forgot about them and found exploded bottles later. We sealed up our beehive in Michigan, put it in the pick-up and drove to our new place in Kentucky. When we unloaded it, the hive broke apart and the bees stung us several dozen times. Mercifully, Mom sold the house in Michigan and we were reunited in Kentucky.

When I was 18, I had a summer job at Dad's company. My job at Kuhlman was to write a computer program that would show how to get the most winds of wire onto a transformer core, essentially a math problem involving packing circles into a given geometry. This is the kind of geometry problem I would see Dad working on every Sunday, growing up.

We would be the first ones to come into to work. I quickly learned that I often got more done between 7:15 and 8:15 than between 8:15 and 5, a lesson I still make use of in my job today. And sitting in a cubicle across the aisle, I saw the way he interacted with the other engineers. He patiently asked them questions about their designs, in almost a Socratic method, to get them to realize the weak points, and I would think to myself, "He's talking to them like he talks to me, like they are children." Then I realized that it wasn't that he was treating them like children, it was that he always treated me like an adult.

Dad: a patient man

Dad was a patient man. Only as a father myself do I appreciate how patient he was: at least four times more patient than me, for I have only half as many children and lose my temper twice as much. One of my fondest and earliest memories of Dad was once at bedtime, when I was perhaps four. Normally, I would have a snack before bed, but we had come home late, it was well past my bedtime, and so into bed I went without a snack. And I cried. Being on the second floor, I had to cry quite loudly to be heard from downstairs. After a very long while of this, perhaps 10-15 minutes, I heard Dad's steel-toed shoes coming up the stairs. Even at my young age, what I expected was a frustrated parent telling me to stop making such a fuss and to go to sleep. Instead, Dad just gave me a sympathetic look and pulled two graham crackers from behind his back.

This kind of patience, day after day, had a big impact on me. I would like to be this kind of father.

Our free compliments models for printing will help you create the perfect funeral speech. Roll down to see the press. You are invited to speak at a funeral and you have a short period of time to gather your thoughts and prepare your speech. Experience the nervousness completely normal, especially as you deal with the pain and grief of loss. It may seem like a complicated task. Which of the many details of their lives do you include? How long should it last? What were you supposed to say? Writing a compliment needs to be scary. Even if you are a writer or public speaker, using the guidelines below, you will be able to write and give a meaningful and sincere speech. Getting ready to write a compliment- Brainstorming Start thinking of things you would be comfortable sharing about this person. The blank page less intimidating if you start to note notes in each of the categories of structure of topics below. You will use all the facts or memories, but you will choose key pieces to include in the model. (Scroll down to see ideas if the loss of a child). It's borderline from the open compliment speech. Thank you all for coming. What was your relationship with the person? What are some key you would like to share about them? Is he born somewhere else or somewhere special? Is there something interesting about your childhood and how it affected your life? Is education and work, marriage and children He/she has a mentioned education or career? Write down the family names.- Significant events and achievements, hobbies and service, beliefs and passions What stands out in these categories? Significant events can be anything specific to them or their family, whether positive or negative. What are some events that caused in their lives? Achievements can be more than a prize. Think of things that were important to them. Maybe he/she Your children to be your greatest achievement. Take a moment to think about what meant a lot to them, what they valued? Memoirs Write several mementos that come to mind when you think of this person. Closure To make a resonant speech, bring it full circle at the end. That means, try to refer to something in the closing you mentioned in the opening. For last, thank you all for coming to celebrate your life. The Scopi's name in hearts, not in tombstones. A legacy recorded in the minds of others and the histories they share about you. Shannon L. Alder If you compliment him for a child, some of the above sections may not be appropriate. Avoid anger and despair over the loss of a young life. Instead, concentrate on positive memories and histories that honor your memory. Consider the following points in your brainstorming:Write down your thoughts about how the death of a child affects those around you. What made the child special for you? Was there a favorite book or poem or song that you can share? What were the favorite things about children? Is what you can ask family or friends to provide details or remember stories about the deceased. If you have access to photo albums, see which memberships begin to emerge as you browse. It forgets the social-day accounts by revising a person's social-day accounts, not by inserting perfectly correct humour into the compliment, but by avoiding anything inappropriate or embarrassing. While you analyze your notes, check out anything in a bad mood or that you do not want to keep. Now, take these ideas and put it all together into a model.
