If you want to pilot the friendly skies yourself, the price can be exorbitant. A private plane can cost up to $800 million. Several key factors contribute to the selling price of an aircraft, including whether you are looking for new or used aircraft for sale. Recurring maintenance costs are also a key part of the total cost of owning an aircraft. Here are some facts and figures to help you compare options for owning or renting an aircraft. Prices vary dramatically for new and used aircraft. A new Cessna 172 Skyhawk, for example, may have a tag price of $275,000, but you might be able to find a used one for around $30,000, according to HoneyWell. From a business point of view, you may need to find a cheap aircraft for sale or a used aircraft for sale with the intention of modifying it and selling it for a profit. Similarly, on other occasions, you may want to look for a used jet plane for sale or used passenger planes for sale. Whatever your preference, a quick look at the key factors discussed below can help you make an informed decision. The number one factor that determines the cost of an aircraft is the reputation of the manufacturer. An aircraft of a popular brand costs more than an aircraft sold by a generic company. Size matters.The bigger the plane, the higher the price. Two-seater aircraft are more expensive than single-seater aircraft. Similarly, multi-engine or twin-engine aircraft are more expensive than single-engine, ultra-light and recreational aircraft. The initial costs of single-engine and single-engine aircraft range from $8,000 to $15,000, while those of single-engine aircraft with two or more seats range from $15,000 to $100,000. Multi-engine planes cost around $75,000 to $300,000, according to Investopedia. Building materials determine how strong, fragile or lightweight is an aircraft, besides affecting the cost. The special design features of color, interior design, exterior design, etc. also take into account the cost. Other expenses include: Rates, insurance, pricing, gas and oil payments, maintenance and work, and taxes and taxes. Buying a damaged airplane for sale is a safe way to reduce your cost. The owners of hardened aircraft often want to download them without making repairs. You can find a lot if you have some resources or knowledge to make repairs. You can also buy used avion engines à €
