In this article, I'm going to walk through steps and examples of how to answer the interview question "Tell me about yourself" to impress employers and get more job offers. We also believe expensive errors you need to avoid if you want to overcome this question. Here is exactly what you are going to get: the most recommended method of how to answer "Tell me about yourself" examples of good answers for a brief and more recent method for candidates. Experts how to practice your answer to make sure you're ready to 100% for the interview. Choose the right starting point for your story (important) your goal when you answer, "Tell me about yourself" is to give a brief and concise walk of your career story that will show relevant pieces of experience. You want to start a point in the past (as you started working in this field), and finish to your current situation. So the first thing to decide is where to start the story ... If you are a recent graduate: it starts with the fact that you just graduated and explain why you chose this career path or study field. For example, you could start your answer in this way: "I have a graduate in Economics two months ago. I chose that field of study because I have always been interested in finance and money, and a couple of family members told me that it leads to great career options, too. If you have 1-8 years of experience, it starts with the moment you graduated and go through your work experience since then. Here is an example of how to start your response: Interview in this situation: "I graduated with my degree in Industrial Engineering six years ago and I immediately went to work for a small design company in Chicago. Since then, I have ... and if you have 8-20 years of experience, you can start with an intermediate point in your career. This will keep your answer for too long. For example, if you are a manager, you could start with how you have become a manager. If you have been working for 25 years, but they were just a sales professional for 12 years, you could start with how it started in sales. Here is an example of how to start your answer to "Tell me about yourself" as a very experienced candidate: "I started managing people twelve years ago, when I was promoted by the customer service supervisor. Since then, I have ... 2. Highlight the impressive experience and accessories as you tell your career story, explain the key results you have achieved, the work you did, the skills you learned, and the key career moves you did. Have you been promoted? This is always a big sign and worth mentioning. You did something significant how to solve a big problem for your employer? This is also nice to mention. Have you built new skills or passed the challenges? Get Specifications! Say that. Say that. Random imposing facts are not sufficient. You should think about how you tie me with the company you're talking to. You should always look for the company before entering the interview. Study their job description in particular so you know what ability to worry more. What does this particular work involve? Is there a lot of leadership? Talk about your experiences that lead (no matter how small it is!), As it went, what you have learned. Does work implies a high level of technical skill? Talk about how you learned and advanced in that area through every phase of your career! You have "you need your answer, "Tell me about yourself" for their description of work and their needs. Try to talk about experiences and qualifications relevant to this job you did Question for 3. Conclude explaining your current situation, the best way to finish your story is to bring them to speed up your current situation. Because you wanted to apply for their work, what are you trying to do the next, etc. could Finish your answer by saying: "It's because I wanted to interview with your company. This position looks like a great opportunity to advance those ability to have just talked about, and continues to build my career and challenging myself ... Keep your reply, employers that employers asked, "Tell me about yourself" in an interview, usually want to hear you as a professional. So the safest approach is to keep the response linked to work and share yours History of career, rather than personal details. You can show more personality like the interview continues, but it is risky to share too many personal information when answering, "Tell me about yourself" you about you. "Could lead to your answer to become Too long, or you could let yourself be important professional information that the interviewer was trying to know! 5. Be concise when answering (2 minutes or less!) When they say "Tell me about yourself" you of you. "I would be tempting to give a response to Lu NGO sale. It is a question so open. And we covered a lot above, but there is something as important as whatever what is what. You must be concise. Your communication and ability to stay on the track with your answer is something you are looking carefully. The interviewer wants to see that you can tell your story from point to (start) to point B (the end) without getting sivals, distracted or scattered. Because it tells them how to communicate as an employee ... when there's a problem it's a problem, when there is a disagreement, or when you simply need to share your knowledge or opinion. If you take this answer over 2 minutes you're shooting in the foot. In fact, below 90 seconds is ideal. Practice at home with a timer! This is why I recommend choosing a starting point in to your experience (step 1 above) "Because if you have 25 years of experience and start at the time you graduated from college, your response will be too long. "It's about you on you Answers: Now that we have covered the key steps to answer, "Tell me about yourself", let's take a look at some examples of complete answer to this interview question. Example Response for Expert Candidates: "I graduated in Business in 2010, and was offered a position of account management by a telecommunications company I had interned with. I loved working with clients and managing and growing my accounts, but the industry we were just not very attractive to me. After that, I stayed a whole year and learned a ton on how to build and manage accounts successfully and ended up becoming a top performer in my group before leaving. I started to mark a year to pursue a very similar position within an industry I am much more enthusiastic about health. I've been in this health boot space for 2 years with this company and I feel ready to bring my career to the next level so that's why I'm currently looking for a new opportunity." The first example showed you how to respond "tell me about yourself" to experienced job seekers (at least a few years of experience). Now let's give an example for entry-level job seekers and experienced job seekers. Example of experienceless response: "I graduated in Engineering two months ago. I chose that field of study because I was always interested in mathematics and physics, and a couple of family members told me that it leads to great career options. One of my key achievements during my academic career was talking at a conference on the theme of designing energy-efficient windows, based on research I had done for one of my high-level classes. This led to an internship I just wrapped up, so I'm actively looking for a full-time location now. "Stand Out by "Tailoring" Your answer to the companyThe end of your interview response is a great opportunity to customize your response to the company and the work you are interviewing. When talking about what you are trying to do after in your career, try to mention anything you see this company that provides for your career (leadership, technical challenges, exposure to new areas, etc.) This shows them because you are excited about their work, which will help you get hired! (I'll explain why this is true here). Before you switch to multiple tips and a HUGE error to avoid, here is another example answer interview for this question. Shorter method for how to respond "Tell me about yourself" (only for expert candidates) The method I gave you above is the most recruiting standard way to respond "Tell me about yourself." That's how I trained the job seekers to answer this question for years. There's another way to respond, though... and it has some benefits.I'll explain... Many experts have pointed out that if the interviewer wanted your career history, they could have looked at your resume or your LinkedIn, or asked a question like: "Can you walk me through your background?" So there isCome closer to reply, "Tell me about yourself" who jumps the story of the career and cuts right in research: because you are fantastic and because they should take you! Let's take a look at 2 Word-for-Word models that make this. After that, you will have two proven methods to answer "Tell me about yourself" in interviews, and in the next section, I will reveal how to decide which method is best for you. Example of response If you are looking for work during use: "Well, I'm currently working on the XYZ Company and I specialize to do _____. The reason I asked for this job is that I saw _____ on the description of the job and I think that I would be able to help you _____ and _____. One of my key results in my current role has been helping my employer do _____, and I'm sure you can help your team get similar results here." Example Model answer if unemployed: "I'm currently unemployed. I specialized in doing _____. The reason I asked for this job is that I saw _____ on the job description and I think I would be able to help you _____ and _____. One of my key results in my latest role for Yyz Company was helping them _____, and I'm sure you can help your team get similar results here." What method should you use for your answer? If you have experienced Eence of work, both options we covered are very good, and if really depends on what you feel at ease with. Choose what you like best. They are both great ways to answer the question, so don't stress above it! However, if you are entry-level and you have no work experience ... or internship, at least ... then I would go back on top of this article and I would use the first one, a 5 step method to respond, "Tell me about yourself" That's on you. "This second method we have just covered is really better if you want to give a unique and concise response and you have some relevant work experience to share in the interview! Practice your answer before the interview as a final suggestion "Make sure you go to practice everything you expect to say when the interviewer asks." What can you tell me about you? "Nothing comes out perfect the first time, and You don't want to look nervous and stumble when they ask. So I suggest you grab a piece of paper and write the key points you want to talk about in your reply. I like to write them in bullet format. Then use the app from the voice recorder of the smartphone to record some practical answers and see how it sounds. Don't look at the notes how your answer is your response. The idea is to try to remember what you want to talk without reading the newspaper. So, look at the AFTER newspaper to make sure you have covered everything. Continue to practice until you can give a smooth answer without forgetting anything important. Note: if you are having phone, you can use release notes/points to help you drive through your response. No one can see you on the phone, so take advantage! advantage!
