Casio CD-401 The first Data Bank watch in 1983. A Casio watch DBC-610 Databank calculator. Casio DBA-800 Databank, the world's first Casio Databank phone dial watch is a series of digital watches manufactured by Casio. They allow data storage for phone names and numbers, memos and in late editions, email addresses; in addition to generally providing a calculator as well as the standard features of a digital watch. History A Casio WVA-200 (right) C-80 radio controlled database is the first calculator clock to be produced. The Databank CD-40 and CD-401 are the first Databank watches, debuting in 1983. It is one of the first digital watches developed in the 1980s that allows the user to store information, following a Pulsar model released in 1982. [1] Over the years, the watches in the Data Bank line have gained a variety of features some of which were the first in the world, starting with the time and time of the world (introduced in the DBC-62), telephone dial (DBA-80/800 and DBA-100/900), electroluminescent backlighting, CBV-30 collaboration, touch screen (VDB-1000 and VDB-200), voice recording capabilities made [4] Future Casio DKW-100 "Kanji" database watch With the advent of smart smartphones and watches, database watches as calculating watches have lost their popularity and are now mainly a fashion statement. Today, Casio still sells database models with basic database functions. Database models with unique features are highly sought after by watch collectors. [5] As of 2020[update], Casio sells the following database models; DBC-611 and DBC-32, which provide data storage, calculation and timeline capabilities, DB-380 and DB-36/360 that provide data storage features.
